Health professionals and those involved in infectious disease research will find Emerging Viruses startling: Harvard researcher Horowitz's studies gather evidence to conclude that AIDS and the Ebola viruses evolved during cancer virus experiments in which monkeys were infected with viral genes from other animals. Certain to spark controversy, this provides quite a different view of virus mutations and evolution. -- Midwest Book Review

I worked at a hospital in San Francisco at the beginning of the AIDS epidemic, so I was very curious about how this previously unknown virus suddenly burst forth and started killing gays in San Francisco. Six months to a year prior to the first cases there was a federal Hepatitis B program targeting high risk people (that is, gays). There was an effort to encourage gays to get the vaccine by getting leaders in the gay community to organize men to get the vaccination. One of the leaders was Reverend Raymond Broshears. When his name appeared in the papers I recalled that he already had a brush with fame, having been David Ferrie's roommate in New Orleans around the time that Ferrie was in cahoots with Lee Harvey Oswald. Ferrie had a long and curious history with the CIA, and was suspected of working on a "cancer cure" in his little makeshift lab. (Ed Haslam has a book about this) Curious, but not suspicious at the time. But then all of sudden people started dying. Was the Hepatitis B vaccine, at least the doses given to gays in San Francisco, the vector of the disease? The list of people who received the vaccine has been ruled "top secret". Why? As the years have gone by there have been various laws about privacy (HIPAA et al), but it would seem to be an easy task for someone to compare who got the vaccine with who started coming down with AIDS six months to a year later. Horowitz's information about the military research into a refractory agent that attacks the immune system has the curious coincidence that the two scientists doing the research into this for Litton Bionetics for the military, Robert Gallo and Luc Montagnier, both worked in the research for the "refractory agent" for Litton et al prior to their work discovering AIDS. Did they "discover" what they created? Considering that Gallo's work was essentially to mix various combinations of animal viruses that produce immunodeficiency. Why work to create a virus to create immunodeficiency? Well, in 1970 a military officer said that the US military was asking for a budget in order to develop such a virus in order to develop a defense against it. Did they make a defense? No. Did they invent an immunodeficient virus? Well, one appeared a few years later. It seems to me that investigating who received those injections for Hep B and their outcomes regarding the late 70s AIDS epidemic in SF would be a quick way to dismiss Horowitz's theory. Alas, those names are still "top secret." I'm glad to see that Horowitz's book is back in print. Just the fact our Department of Defense received money from Congress to investigate viral agents "refractory" to the immune system should turn on a lightbulb. Great book. Read it and start asking questions.

I have been looking for proof for many years and this book actually fit quite nicely with all the other discoveries I found to date. I can not thank you enough for disclosing the harm done to people and using them as experiments. People need to wake up. This book explains it all very clearly. Ronald Reagan summed it up. The nine most terrifying words in the English language are: I'm from the government and I'm here to help. Thank you to Horowitz he has exposed evils.

As a licensed Health professional I highly recommend this book . I can only say that if you think you understand everything about AIDS, Ebola and the entire origin of viruses ,you will be surprised at what you don;t know. What I like most about this book is that it is well written. In addition, Dr Horowitz provides substantial documented evidence which confirms facts about the development of AIDS and Ebola. There is also convincing evidence presented regarding the governments role, pharmaceuticals, private and non profit entities. Yes, Dr Horowitz brings it all together in his book and answers many questions of those of us who dare to question the established medical-scientific industrial complex.

I rented the bottom floor of Dr. Horowitz's house during the final stages of this book, proof read the final draft, and suggested the title. The documentation is impressive. Any one who is interested in this topic should read and consider the data.

Very impressed with Dr. Horowitz and am inclined to believe his research that implicates parts of the U.S. Government in the initial creation and spread of the so called AIDS virus. AIDS, like Cancer, is big business for the nasty Pharmaceutical cabal and kudos to Dr. Horowitz who has put himself out there as one of their most outspoken critics.

Dr. Leonard Horowitz brings a unique view of history into focus that reveals his quest for truth and knowledge while promoting universal health and well being. This is in stark contrast to a system apparently bent on global power and domination and the suppression of a holistic approach to health care. Following WWII, the OSS, the wartime precursor to the CIA, arranged for numerous Nazi war criminals to escape to various locations around the world, allowing them to continue their various experiments but under the hidden control of U.S. authorities. Hitler wrote in MEIN KAMPF, "If you tell a lie long enough, eventually it will be believed as truth.... [and] the greater the lie, the more people will believe it." Horowitz contributes the demise of America's free press to the FBI and the CIA and reminds us that during the height of the Cold War, Richard Nixon was president, Henry Kissinger was in power, and George Bush was in Congress. Groups active in the Council on Foreign Relations were focused on population control and urged policy makers and industrialists to reduce the size of the U.S. population to that of the 1940s. Population control is one thing; the means for controlling population is quite another. Horowitz reminds us that biological methods for reducing the Indian population were used through the use of blankets contaminated with smallpox, and he contends that the Rockefeller Foundation, in collusion with the CIA, has tampered with present population figures by controlling funding for scientific and academic research. Of particular concern are the percentage of the U.S. population that received polio vaccines prior to 1964, who are at risk of carrying the contaminant SV40 and spreading it to family members as well as others within their communities. Though authorities have argued that SV40 is not a health issue for the population, independent researchers have concerns that SV40 may contribute to more virulent viruses over time, notwithstanding its link to various forms of cancer. Present trends indicating marked increases in the diagnosis of chronic fatigue syndrome, attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, autism, and other behavior-linked illnesses in children "may be the inadvertent consequences of stealth virus vaccine contaminants" There has been much debate about the origin of modern day ailments, including AIDS and Ebola. Though authorities would generally have us believe that AIDS jumped species naturally to initially infect people, Horowitz emphasizes the fact that it did so simultaneously, on two separate continents and in the two exact regions where AIDS-like virus and vaccine experiments were taking place. There is also the indication that our intelligence community requested research for the creation of just such auto-immune viruses. How they have been used as covert weapons against perceived threats remains in contention. Horowitz summarizes the use of biological research for clandestine operations by quoting the former Foreign Minister of Ireland and 1974 Nobel Peace Prize recipient, Sean MacBride, "... a democracy and the rule of law [can] not survive side by side with a state agency that engages in covert operations ranging from assassinations to levying mercenary armies to directing lethal biological weapons experiments and public health policies. Even if there is, now, an attempt being made by some to check the activities of the CIA and other U.S. Intelligence agencies, the whole concept of secret government and army within a government is a menace to the democratic system." ***
