Macau Travel Guide: Macau

Synopsis

There are thirty-three gambling clubs in Macau, of which the greatest is the Venetian Macao. It is likewise the greatest gambling club on the planet. The clubhouse resorts are a dynamite sight during the evening. Raelian and I were awed by the towering statues of the gambling clubs and their amazing obscure of colorful lighting showcases. This is presumably the picture that a great many people have in their psyche when they consider Macau. As said in my past article, I observed this showy display be excessively overpowering for me. For me, these gambling clubs were a glaring impression of man's insatiability and allurements. Whenever Raelian and I took the between club transport in the early morning, we saw numerous moderately aged speculators with dark circles under their eyes gazing vacantly into space, crouching in their seats and shuddering in the driving rain morning air with a jug of clubhouse named mineral water in their grasp. They had most likely spent the whole night betting and were headed to attempt their fortunes at the following club. This made them think. Did they have families? Provided that this is true, would their betting propensity (or fixation) cause hopelessness for their friends and family? What issues and sufferings lay underneath the spectacular outside of Macau? (To clear up: I have nothing against betting, or individuals who bet. On the other hand, betting turns into a difficult issue when it turns into a habit.)
