Founded in 1915 as the Cartographic Group, the first division of National Geographic, National Geographic Maps has been responsible for illustrating the world around us through the art and science of mapmaking. Today, National Geographic Maps continues this mission by creating the world's best wall maps, recreation maps, atlases, and globes which inspire people to care about and explore their world.

Just got the "Bundle" and it is actually just one map with the north on one side and the south on the other. For a little more I think I would have bought the two maps separately. That way each map would be used less and last longer. At $20 a pop that means something. Also I am curious if the scale is the same and what extra information is provided on the two separate maps. Finally, the information is indeed dated. Open source digital maps are a lot better, but I like to have a piece of paper/plastic to look at.

We recently visited southern Baja, putting over 600 miles on the rental car. This map is durable and highly accurate. Small roads and villages are included, as are military checkposts, gas stations, and points of interest. We traveled some obscure roads and all were included on the map, even dusty, paveless roads in the mountains. The map easily folds back 'into place' and it doesn't wrinkle or tear. The map also includes distance charts between most cities/towns, which we found to be accurate. Note that there are two maps: One for southern Baja and one for Northern Baja. The maps are also two-sided, as the full length of north and south doesn't fit on one side. Great item if you'll be touring Baja.

Pretty good maps of Baja. Labels are in the way of some pertinent information though.

This is a pretty decent map for Baja paved roads and many of the unpaved "roads" in Baja, which makes it far better than most hardcopy maps of Baja. Last week (Feb. 2012) we used this paper map combined with a public domain .gpx file on a Garmin 60CSX to navigate just over 1000 miles of the trails (and goat tracks that are considered roads in Baja) between the border and the Valle de Los Cirios. We rarely got lost, and the National Geographic map really helped us figure out which GPS track we should be following when we did find ourselves lost. Worth buying whether you plan to travel on or off road in Baja California (norte). If you plan to travel the dirt roads and trails, I highly recommend you also have a hiking style GPS such as a Garmin 60CSX or 62S. With only the paper map we would have become and stayed lost several times and probably spent a night in the desert without any shelter.

Nice maps.

Outdated.

The map is a little out of date (published 2008) Just got back from a Baja trip (Jan 2017) and some of the newer roads are not on the map. They should update

Tried to pick these maps up from AAA but they don't carry them any more. These maps give you the detail you want and are high quality.
